TELLING THE TRUTH

SOME of the state papers that are engaged in the delectable business of moulding local opinion are peeved over the action of the Bonanza in saying a good word for Sam Belford, the most acceptable Democratic candidate for the nomination to succeed Francis Newlands, as well as endorsing Sam Platt for the Republican nomination. What of it? Both men are good enough for the common people, and they would make a race befitting a representative government. Nobody wants a jughanded contest. Let the boys go to it and let the better man win. This is the day for youth and beauty to annex the popular vote, and its dimes to doughnuts that the present United States district attorney would land the persimmons.

Nevada has passed the time when dollars could be relied on to carry an election. The voters will have something to say about representation in the United States senate, and the platform will point the way for continued prosperity and a resumption of confidence that has been badly shattered by the antagonism manifested by Newlands and Pittman to the chief industries of the state. Ten cent wool, free sugar, eggs from the offal heaps of China and free beef and mutton from New Zealand and Australia are cold facts leveled at the producers of Nevada. With such arguments in the campaign it does not seem that there could be much doubt about the attitude of the voters at the polls.

Let the Democrats put their best man forward. They will need him and the silver tongued oratory of Sam Belford and his brilliant imagination may possibly blind the public to the merits of the real issue before the country. Belford has a most convincing manner on the platform, but he dare not array business conditions and industrial statistics in this campaign. The argument is against him and he may find recourse in the empty party platitudes that have made him famous as the leader of the younger Democratic element.

Nevada's new purity election law increases the hopelessness of Newlands who must face the necessity for making the campaign on the proposition that he cannot spend 20 per cent of one year's compensation. Such a disbursement would be the merest bagatelle for the Sharon family and one that will spell defeat for the present senior senator.

A MOUNTEBANK IN THE PULPIT

STANDING in an orthodox pulpit, Rev. Charles F. Aked has denied that Jesus of Nazareth was of divine origin. If that is what Dr. Aked believes it is right for him to say so. But a Presbyterian pulpit is not the place to make such a statement, nor can one understand how he can remain in the Presbyterian ministry after repudiating a cardinal article of the Calvinistic faith and a fundamental concept of the Christian religion.

Dr. Aked attacks the doctrine of the trinity in denying the divinity of Jesus. If Jesus was the son of Joseph the carpenter, His birth was a natural one; He was not God's begotten son, and His deification is monstrous idolatry. All the Christian churches are worshipping a mere man as a God and endowing Him with the fictitious attributes of a Savior. The sacrament is a farce and the whole fabric of Christian dogma an ecclesiastical fable.

Dr. Aked belongs in the Unitarian denomination if he has any place in the ministry. He has rejected the cornerstone of Christianity, repudiated the vital principle on which it rests, and is therefore as much out of place in an orthodox pulpit as would be a Moslem imam or a Hindu yogi.

But Dr. Aked delights in publicity and has a fondness for a sensation which age cannot wither or custom stale. He has probably reduced Jesus to the ranks because he thinks he should himself rank next to the Almighty.
